National Political Strategist, Phillip Stutts, Forms Grassroots Consulting Firm

Washington, D.C. - Phillip Stutts, the Republican National Committee's 2004 National Director for the 72 Hour Task Force, announced today the creation of Phillip Stutts & Company, LLC, a Washington, D.C. based political and public affairs grassroots consulting firm.

Phillip Stutts & Company, LLC, will offer strategic grassroots and communications consulting benefiting Republican candidates, political campaigns, state Republican parties, trade associations and corporate clients.

Phillip has spent the past nine years organizing winning political campaigns from the local level to the national level serving as a grassroots, communications, and fundraising strategist.

In the 2004 election cycle Phillip directed the 72 Hour Task Force for all 50 states, focusing most intensely on the Bush/Cheney '04 battleground states. President Bush won reelection with 51% of the vote and is the first President in 68 years to be re-elected while his party increased majorities in the U.S. House and Senate.

Phillip has previously worked for Vice President Dan Quayle, Senator John Thune, and managed Congressman Bobby Jindal's gubernatorial campaign in 2003. He has also served at the Republican National Convention (1996), National Republican Senatorial Committee (1997), Republican National Committee (1999-2001), and the U.S. Department of Education (2001-2002).

Senator John Thune of South Dakota praised Phillip's reputation, stating: "A winning campaign is based on building an organization from the ground up and developing a plan that incorporates all strategic thinking in order to execute and win. No one knows how to do that better than Phillip Stutts."

Congressman Bobby Jindal of Louisiana stated: "Campaigns are about putting hundreds of pieces of a plan together, being aggressive from a strategic communications standpoint, and implementing that plan to win. I've never seen anyone do it as well as Phillip Stutts."
